Who Can Say?

Editor of the Daily News:

If "A Greensboro Resident" was sincere in the letter written Feb. 8, then there would not have been absent the person's name.

Today few of us have the courage to say openly what we truly feel. We have bred conformity—social and economic—to the point of endangering the freedom we hold so dearly.

It is easy to say "I believe in integration" when we do not have it. How many who say this are doing something to help integration?

I believe the educated person thinks he should believe in integration. But, who can say how he would react if we did have total integration?
