"Inalienable Rights"

Editor of the Daily News:

Is it too much to ask for something that is rightfully ours? The Negro is not asking for the world. He is only asking for the rights he should have as an individual, as well as a citizen of the United States.

The citizenship of the Negro was recognized in the 14th Amendment in the Constitution of the United States (1868)—nearly a century ago. Should we not be created on the same level as any other race? The immigrants of our country are thought to be better than the American-born Negro. Why should this be?

It is a biological fact that no race is superior to another, this includes the Caucasoid, the Negroid and the Mongoloid.

It was stated in the Declaration of Independence and the "Gettysburg Address" that "all men are created equal," but this privilege has yet to be given to the Negro.

We don't want the world; we only want "our inalienable rights"—life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness.
